

Ankle replacement has become a viable and successful option for the appropriately selected patient. This patient has significant tilting and instability of the ankle that was successfully treated with ankle replacement. Age, body habitus, level of activity, preoperative ankle range of motion smoking history, and medical history all enter into the decision making process.

